

Employee Performance Appraisal – Instructions and Guidelines

Purpose of Appraisals

Employee performance appraisals benefit both the Diocese of Winona-Rochester and its employees. Appraisals provide an effective means of measuring employee performance against stated goals and objectives, the Diocesan mission statement, job descriptions, policies, etc. Individual's strengths and accomplishments are commended, confirming an employee's value to the Diocese. Areas noted for improvement are addressed for productive coaching. Appraisals offer a chance to redefine the employee's position and the overall value of their work for the Diocese. New goals are established, therefore boosting development and motivation on the part of the employee as they face new challenges. Supervisors can gather information about future training needs, as well as valuable employee feedback concerning the Diocese and the employee's job.

Timing of Appraisals

At the Pastoral Center, employees should receive their first performance appraisal upon completion of their introductory hiring period; typically after 90 days or 6 months of employment. Annual appraisals typically occur at the beginning of the calendar year. Informal appraisals should also occur throughout the year (i.e. Monthly Employee "Check-ins") to recognize major accomplishments, address performance shortcomings, etc.

Writing the Appraisal

In practice, the employee performance appraisal should be a summary of how job duties were performed as well as a review of any formal and informal discussions that may have occurred between the employee and supervisor over the course of the specified evaluation period. The document should include comments that are consistent with the rating that is given for each factor on the Employee Performance Appraisal Form. In addition to completing the form, any past and future objectives that will be a focal point of the appraisal discussion should also be included as part of the appraisal meeting. Before administering the appraisal, it is important to have the next level supervisor in the chain of command (up to the Vicar General/Moderator of the Curia), "sign-off" on the appraisal. If comments from another supervisor are included, that supervisor should also "sign off" on the appraisal.

Administering the Appraisal

There are several ways to administer performance appraisals depending upon the style of the appraiser. Some supervisors prefer to give a "blank" appraisal form to the person that will be the recipient of the appraisal as a way for them to do a self-appraisal. This process is also helpful for the employee to become familiar with the appraisal format as well as to formulate thoughts and talking points for when the formal meeting occurs. Whether this approach is used or not, it is always important to give the employee at least one day's notice that the appraisal will be conducted. Allow for adequate time (up to one hour) and privacy for the appraisal.

After the Appraisal

Once the appraisal discussion has concluded, the employee should have the opportunity to make comments and “sign-off”. This may occur immediately at the end of the meeting, or in some instances the employee may want a day or two to think about what comments they would like to write on the appraisal. Follow up with the employee to make sure the form is returned to the supervisor and eventually to the Office of Human Resources in an envelope marked “CONFIDENTIAL” for filing. In all cases, if the employee wants a copy of their appraisal a copy should be made. In addition, the appraiser should always keep a copy of the appraisal before giving the employee the original to sign off. It is important to stress to the employee that the document should be treated as confidential.

Summary

The Employee Performance Appraisal is a wise investment in effort and time for you and the employees who work for the Diocese of Winona-Rochester. As the employee’s supervisor, you are responsible for giving accurate, candid and timely feedback to ensure that the employee remains focused on the right programs and projects that are ongoing in the diocese. No appraisal form or process is perfect, however when administered correctly it is a key tool in managing productivity, employee development and morale.
